

HARRY AND CYRANO AND SAREK

Josh W. Spencer

Editor's note: Star Trek is known for some pretty memorable characters, both regulars and guest stars. Does a Trek fan exist who can't do an imitation of at least one of the bridge crew? For the purposes of gaming, nothing really beats a good, solidly individual characterization whose mannerisms can be easily recognized time and again. People like the redoubtable Sarek, Vulcan ambassador and father to Spock; Cyrano Jones, the portly and jovial unfortunate trader; and of course Harcourt Fenton Mudd, the one and only.

Josh Spencer thought that we don't see enough of these people. So he expanded on the character stats from FASA's Federation Sourcebook, pp. 122-124, to give players a bigger handle on their relevant skills and abilities. The results are surprising and, we hope, useful. Harry Mudd turns out to have a skill in Federation Law of 81—useful, one must suppose, if one wishes only to circumvent the law, not break it. Sarek of Vulcan, ambassador and scientist, stands at the pinnacle of his life's achievements at the age of 117. (It's not a common man who can give life to a son, twice.) Even the luckless Cyrano Jones, plagued by tribbles as much as any mortal man, has his Carousing score of 87 to comfort him. It better; it's his highest skill.

Perhaps he should have an additional skill, after having spent all that time detribblizing Space Station K-7. A score of, say, 27 or so in Trivia: Tribble Hiding Places.

Be that as it may, we hope you'll find his expansions useful and entertaining. Have fun!
