Introduction

For the development of a scientific network amongst Indonesian scientists and international scientists as science users in particular in field of basic and applied science, we propose an international science symposium 2014. The proposed International science symposium will allow participants to communicate and share better ways to enhance science towards globalization in developing country.

Makassar city, the capital of South Sulawesi province known as one of the biggest cities in Indonesia and also having Hasanuddin University, the biggest university in eastern Indonesia, has plenty of natural resources and human resources. Having a strategic position at the center point of Indonesia, Makassar has been developing very rapidly, and has been contributing to the regional, national and even international economic development. Given this science can play important roles and therefore is needed to support rapid development in various sectors. With regard to this, Faculty of Mathematics and Natural Sciences Hasanuddin University would like to contribute to enhance basic and applied sciences through the proposed international symposium through which scientists and science users and other stakeholders would have opportunity to share and communicate current research activities in math, biology, chemistry, physics, statistic, computer sciences and other relevant topics.
